Boarding Patients Received and Treated
AT HYGEIAN HOME,
FLORENCE HEIGHTS, N. J.

DRS. BROWN AND TRALL are treating CANCERS and all similar affections with unparalleled success. Their new method is prompt, certain, harmless, and nearly painless. They will warrant every case they undertake, and REQUIRE NO PAY UNTIL THE TREATMENT IS SUCCESSFUL. Cases hitherto regarded as hopeless are curable in a majority of instances, while ordinary tumors are removed and the part healed in a few days.
The new remedy has been tested by regular physicians in various parts of the country during the last three years without a single failure. We are at liberty to refer to them, and their testimonials can be seen in our office.
One method of treatment is certain to supersede all others as rapidly as it becomes known.
Other malignant tumors, as well as all abnormal growths of every description, are also treated with uniform success.
By the new process of transplanting or engrafting bits of healthy skin on large ulcerated surfaces, cases hitherto regarded as incurable are readily healed.
Patients who desire Hygienic diet, bathing, or other treatment for the general health, or who prefer to be in the country, will be attended to at Hygeian Home, Florence Hights, N. J. Address,

MILL STREET, BRISTOL.

REMEMBERED DAYS.

I remember a morn behind the mills,
When blackbirds sang,
And sheep-bells rang,
Far off, and all things else were still.
But the rising beam
In the pictured stream,
And the noise of the water about the mill.

I remember a maid in her sweet youth,
Whose gentle days
In chilling ways
Were passed in simple work of truth;
The summer's day
Sped fleet away
In a dream of love in a time of youth.

I remember the spring in a garb of green,
Its light heart glee
That came to me
With the smile of my love at seventeen;
Her laugh that went
Like woodland scent
To my soul that time on the daisied green.

And though I know the days are spent,
That love was lost
When came the frost,
At summer's close of my content;
Yet some joy stays
In winters days,
And bright its joys complement.

THERE'S MANY A MURPHY.

"The fact is, said Mrs. Bixby, "you might as well look for a needle in a haystack as to try and find any lost creature in this big blazing bumble-bee of a city. You may as well give it up at once." And she looked over at her brother-in-law's brother with an impatience that she tried in vain to suppress. For it was not politic to succumb to this feeling of exasperation which her brother-in-law's brother had induced by this infatuation of his about his youngest sister, who had run away from home with a scoundrel years and years ago—long enough, as Mrs. Bixby thought, to have dropped out of any reasonable family's remembrance. It was not politic, because this tormenting and persistent man, who insisted upon hunting where there was no hope of finding, was a bachelor of mature years and ample fortune.

Joshua Flanders' farm out on the border Mrs. Bixby had heard of as a marvel of richness and prosperity; the soil was jet black for fathoms deep, and crop after crop could be taken therefrom without administering the mildest tonic for this drain upon its resources. The mowers and reapers and binders and sowers, and all the other machines, were numberless and inestimable; thousands and thousands of acres, level, infinite, and unfenced, dazzled the imagination and filled the admiring heart of Mrs. Bixby.

"Not a chick to inherit it all," she said to herself, "but his brother and the children."

"Lost creature!" repeated her brother-in-law's brother. "Lost!" God forbid, Maria!"

"Well, can you find her?" said Mrs. Bixby. She was polishing the silver coffee urn and almost made a dent in its brilliant side in her irritation. "Can you find her, Joshua Flanders?"

"No, no," he said, shaking his head mournfully, "I can't find her."

"Can I find her? Can your brother John find her? Can his wife, my sister, find her? Can the multitude of people and papers you've written to find her? No. Then she's lost, isn't she? If a thing can't be found, it's lost, ain't it?"

"Yes, yes," said Joshua, still shaking his head dolefully; "in one sense she's lost; but I don't like to hear you call her a lost creature, Maria."

"Shall I call her a lost coffee-urn, Joshua, a lost hoof-jack, a lost spittoon?" Mrs. Bixby's sharp black eyes had fallen upon these things one after the other. "Shall I call her a lost cravat?" she continued. "You'd better fix yours before you go out, Joshua, for it's away around under your left ear. And I suppose we'd best get ready, for we'll have to wait outside till the doors are opened, so as to get a good seat. Jane's a little hard of hearing, and Moody's voice in the distance is thick and indistinct. Sankey's you can hear to the end of creation; but it's a dreadful strain to catch every word of Moody's, if you happen to be late, and can't get down in the body of the building."

Mrs. Bixby's brother-in-law's brother sighed once more, heavily and de-pairingly, and then went slowly up stairs to arrange his toilet for this trip to the Hippodrome.

This was his last day in the metropolis, his very last; and the only news he had gained in all these years of poor little Kitty had come from this big seething city. It must have been fully ten years since he saw that account of the brawl in the paper telling of Murphy's death; and although he wrote at once, and made every effort to find this now widowed sister, all was in vain. She was gone, she was lost, as Mrs. Bixby had said—a little pebble in the big whirlpool, swept away. He looked out of his window, and as it was up in the Mansard-roof, it commanded a view of myriads of chimneys as far as the eye could reach. He wondered, in a weak, vacillating way, if the smoke from Kitty's frugal fire had crept thinly up through any of these chimneys, and he had actually put his arms upon the window-sill and looked mournfully forth, when a tap upon the door aroused him from his reverie.

He opened it, and found upon the threshold a quantity of lace, and silk, and velvet, that almost extinguished the slight form of his niece, Maria Genevieve Flanders.

"I want to bid you once more good by, dear Uncle Joshua," she said, in a high treble, and poured forth her words quickly and pantingly—"just once more, dear Uncle Joshua."

Uncle Joshua stooped and kissed her after his melancholy fashion, and finding that she still remained in the doorway, he kissed her again, this time putting his horny hand upon her little velvet-clad shoulders, whereupon she shrank back.

"Don't rumple my collar, please," she said, still remaining there, tossing her long golden curls, and lifting her big blue eyes greedily to the dim, sad ones of the Western farmer.

All at once Joshua thought of something. He put his hand in his vest pocket and took from thence a bright new bit of currency. As the crisp little bill rattled in his fingers, the eyes of young Miss Genevieve grew more and more eager. Her little kid-gloved hand extended itself, clasped the bit of currency, and then she departed, casting no glance behind.

Joshua Flanders gazed after the dainty little body, and his countenance grew more lugubrious than ever.

"It wasn't a nice thing for this poor husbandman to think that his brother, his sister-in-law, and his sister-in-law's sister, their children, their men-servants and maid-servants, and every one within their gates, cared nothing for him, save only so far as he could minister to their greediness for these bits of currency that made pleasure the pockets of his capacious vest.

He wouldn't have cared so much if only he could have found Kitty, his poor, long-lost sister—if he could only have relieved her misery, could have shielded her from poverty and want and wretchedness with these bits of currency which he was compelled to squander upon these other relatives of his, who needed not his help or generosity. At this moment she might be starving, she and her children, for perhaps there was this addition to her wretchedness—might be dying of want only a few blocks away; and poor Joshua sat down on the bed, and plunged his hands in his scant gray hair and groaned in spirit. He could see the wretched garret in which they lived, the dilapidated walls that sheltered these loved ones, its broken and decayed appointments; he could see Kitty, once so beautiful and rosy and blessed, now well on in years, cadaverous, horror-haunted, desperate woman.

He got upon his feet and walked up and down.

"O most merciful God," he cried, "give me to find my poor sister, my long-lost Kitty."

And Mrs. Bixby, who had gone up to see if he was ready, turned on her heel and went down stairs again.

"If he was worth the mines of Golconda," said Mrs. Bixby to her sister Jane, when she reached the back parlor again, "I should have to tell him what I thought of him—what a poor, miserable fool of an idiot he was!"

"I hope you'll remember, Maria," said Jane, "that the welfare of my innocent children depends upon your prudence. He's in that state of mind now that he might leave his money in charity or any other dreadful way."

"Well, for pity's sake," said Mrs. Bixby, "let's get through with to-day, and, thank Heaven, to-morrow he'll be well on his way westward. I do hope and pray he'll never come on here again."

Singularly enough, Mr. Moody chose for his text the subject of uncertainty as to what a day would bring forth.

They had not been able, after all, to gain what Maria called the body of the building. The vacillation and mournful hesitancy of Uncle Joshua had delayed them in various ways, so that when they reached the big edifice the door were already open, and instead of the comfortable body of the building that Maria coveted, they were thrust into a far-off gangliion or nerve of the monster.

So that half of the sermon was lost upon Jane. She could see the quick, emphatic gestures of Mr. Moody, distinguished here and there whole sentences, and then lost the thread of it all. But Joshua was fortunately one of the few human being—only one out of four of the whole human race—who have their full normal hearing.

Many a time when sitting upon his veranda away out in his Western home, when the sweet summer day was sinking dreamily into the tender arms of night, in a moment of sunset glow and hush and infinity of solitude, when the frogs ceased to croak and the crickets to chirp, Joshua Flanders could hear the mournful bowl of the coyote miles and miles away, and the light tread of a rabbit close by.

So that he never lost a word of Mr. Moody's sermon. This practical and plain but decisive preacher told Joshua that there was no knowing what a day might bring forth, in such a graphic and forcible way that the poor old gentleman began to be invigorated with hope, stirred up, worked upon by Mr. Moody's earnestness in something the like way that a galvanic battery pours into the deadened muscles a short but strong dose of life.

The religion of his life was to find his poor forsaken and widowed sister—she that was abused and cast forth from her father's house, and her name unknown there for years; she that was the victim of this miserable politician and wire-puller, who was fortunately killed in a brawl at last—it was his religion to seek out and find this bruised and broken reek; and, inspired by the eloquence of Mr. Moody, Joshua began to look about him with the hope that he might find her there that very day.

There were at least five thousand people gathered there, and among them many a pale, spiritless face caught a fleeting glow of relief and raised itself to the voice of the preacher; others sunk trembling and supplicant, and among these was one that attracted Joshua. Her head was bowed upon her thin and trembling hands—it seemed as if she had scarcely strength enough to hold it upright. Her shawl of a rusty black, her shabby crape veil, the darned and faded gloves upon her hand, gave Joshua to believe that she was a widow and miserably poor. Something in the turn of her shoulders had seemed familiar to him; her height, as she stood to sing, was that of his long-lost Kitty. The few hairs which straggled beneath her bonnet, if they had been less gray, would have exactly matched the lock which he always carried in his pocketbook; and when at last she raised her head, and Joshua looked full upon her face, his whole frame trembled.

"Don't look back so much," said Mrs. Bixby. "What on earth ails you?" There's nothing to be afraid of. I do believe," she added, to her sister Jane, "he's looking for the way out; he's afraid of one of the beams falling, or something. Dear me, what a blessing it will be when he's safe on his way to-morrow!"

Joshua wiped the perspiration from his streaming brow. Yes, he had found her at last, worn and stricken with sad years of sorrow, of poverty, of bitterness of heart and spirit; yet in the dark, unquenchably brilliant eyes, in the yet graceful and shapely form, in the pleading and gentle expression, her face was as familiar to him as his own. Why, there was even the old scar upon her cheek from the fish hook he had unwittingly buried there.

A serene joy began to beam upon the florid face of Joshua Flanders. Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine," and it was with difficulty Joshua could be kept in his seat. Tears rolled down his cheeks. "Yes, yes," he murmured, "I go to the desert to find my sheep."

"Good gracious!" said Mrs. Bixby, nudging Jane with her umbrella; "I believe in my heart he's going to do something dreadful—get converted or something. My life, what a care he is!"

But Joshua was oblivious of the ninety-and-nine of his relatives among whom Mrs. Bixby belonged. All that he thought of was the one that he had lost; and during the benediction he kept his eyes firmly fixed upon the now veiled and drooping form of the widow.

Alas! in one moment, in a second, she was swept away out of his sight. The vast multitude heaved behind him. He was pushed, driven, bewildered; he hesitated, and was lost. Mrs. Bixby endeavored in vain to reach him with her umbrella; Jane beckoned wildly, called in vain. He heeded not. They were driven on, lost in the crowd, and still he was unmindful. What mattered it to him who was gone, now that he had lost sight of Kitty? But suddenly in the distance he seemed to him that he saw her; and now indeed he resolved that come what might he would not lose sight of her again. He began to push his way through the crowd, keeping his eyes steadily fixed upon the shrinking form, and the people about him found out that this old man had considerable push about him. He reached her side at the door, and they were thrust into the street together, but with desperate tenacity he grasped the corner of her shawl.

"Don't be frightened, ma'am," he stammered, "I have business with you. I—I in fact, ma'am, I—I am a friend. Do you know a lady by the name of Kitty Murphy—Mrs. Kitty Murphy?"

"Yes, yes, sir," said the lady; "I know her well—as well as I know myself."

"Ah!" said Joshua, taking a long breath. "Thank God, I have found you at last! Do you know I have come a thousand miles to find you? Do you know that for the last ten years it has been the dream of my life to see you as you are before me? May I go to your home and talk with you out of the crowded street?"

She looked at him in a dazed and wondering way, and said, in a sad voice that went to Joshua's heart, "Yes, you may come to my home, sir. It is a poor one, but you can come."

"A poor one," he muttered, as they went along. Of course it is. I expected it to be poor." And presently, as they turned into a crooked and tumble-down thoroughfare, into a narrow alley, through a dark and dingy doorway, up dilapidated stairs, into a clean but wretchedly furnished room, where the evidences of poverty were unmistakable, the face of Joshua began to glow with satisfaction. "Poorer even than I thought," he murmured. "On the verge of starvation, likely." And unable longer to stifle his emotion, his joy, his unspeakable gratitude, he turned to the poor lady, and said, in a voice husky with agitation: "It's all over, dear. Thank God, it's past—all the hardship and agony. I'm your brother, Kitty—your old brother Joshua. Don't you know Josh? Don't you remember the dear old home out West? It's waiting for us now, dear, ten times more beautiful than ever. I saw your husband's death in the paper. He was killed in a brawl, the scoundrel, just as he deserved to be."

"Hush, sir!" said the lady, indignantly. "My husband killed in a brawl! What do you mean? He died decently in his bed. How dare you say such a thing? You're wandering, you're mistaken, sir, or demented—Heaven knows which."

Joshua sank down upon a chair, the three legs of which giving way under him, he fell upon the floor.

"Didn't you tell me, faltered the poor old man, "that you were Kitty Murphy?"

"I said I knew of a lady by that name, and God knows I do, and—and"—here she paused and listened to the sound of carriage wheels—"here she is," she added, running to the window; "here she is. God bless her!"

Joshua staggered to his feet in time to reach the window and see a lady descend from a carriage at the door, and not a word more was spoken till she mounted the stairs and entered the room.

"This is Mistress Kitty Murphy," said the poor woman, "the best lady and the most beautiful the sun ever shone upon. She has kept a roof over my head and food in mine and the children's mouths the whole dreary winter. God bless you ma'am, he followed me out of the Hippodrome, thinking I was his lost sister that's been lost or dead this many a year, and strange to say, her name was like your own; but, for that matter, there's many a Murphy."

Here the poor woman stopped talking, finding that her benefactress and the strange gentleman were gazing at each other steadfastly.

Joshua could not take his eyes from the face of this lovely woman before him. She was in silks and velvets; a faint perfume touched his senses. She was a creature of all luxury; but Joshua couldn't take his eyes from her face.

Her own were fast filling with tears, and she clasped and unclasped her hands, and took one little step forward.

"Don't tell me," said Joshua sternly "that you are Kitty Flanders."

"Oh," she said, taking a few more little steps forward, and throwing herself into his arms. "I should have died if you had disappointed me. You are Josh, of course—dear old Josh! Oh, how happy I am! Come and get into the carriage and go home with me right straight away! Oh, isn't it perfectly splendid?" she said to the poor woman; who nodded her head with joy. "Isn't it grand? You dear, dear, old blessing! and she coaxed and pulled poor bewildered Joshua out of the room, and down the stairs, and into the carriage.

"Home," she said to the coachman, and then she snuggled up to Joshua, put her perfumed head upon his shoulder, and burst into tears of joy, which softened Joshua's heart. Two or three half-checked sobs escaped him, but he gazed upon the feathered and bejaced head, the diamonds that shone in her little ears, the luxurious upholstery of the carriage, and Joshua looked very lugubrious.

"It seems you are not in want, then," he said, sternly.

"In want, dear? Why, certainly not."

"You are, perhaps, even rich," he added grimly.

"Well, moderately so, Josh. I've plenty to help you with, dear, if you want help."

Joshua lifted her head from his shoulder.

"Kitty," he said, this is hard, this is cruel. Here I've come a thousand miles, expecting to find you in want, destitution, perhaps, even starvation. I have plenty of money to relieve you. I counted upon it; it has been the dream of my life. And to see you here dressed up like a puppet, with trinkets in your ears that would buy a big share of the old place, offering even to help me—it's too much—it's not to be borne, Kitty."

"I'm so sorry," said Kitty. "It's too bad to disappoint you, but it's all the fault of James—he will keep getting rich, do what I can. You don't know how hard I labor in this way. But he is the most irrepressible fellow. The more I spend the more he gets. And there he is now on the door-step yonder. It's the only fault he has Josh. Try to forgive him for my sake."

And actually there James Murphy stood on the door-step of his brown-stone house, looking as well and prosperous as if he had never been killed in a brawl.

When Kitty told him all about it he extended a hand to Joshua, the little finger of which held a diamond as big as a plover's egg, and declared he never was so glad of anything in his life.

"For you see, Josh," he said, when they were all comfortably settled at dinner, and the porcelain and prodigality had almost taken away Joshua's breath as well as appetite, "you see Kitty has had everything else, and it's a woman's nature to be always wanting; so all these years she's been pining for that waste of land out on the prairie and her brother Josh. I've told her I had no objection to hunting you out, if it wasn't for the rest. They treated me rather shabbily out there in the campaign, if you remember; but you had always a good word for me, Josh, and I'm not the man to forget these things. If you stay on this way, I'll make a place for you somewhere; something in the customs would suit you, I think." And this prosperous politician surveyed Joshua with a rather critical air.

"I'm obliged," said Joshua, coldly, "but I must go back to that waste of land on the prairie." And then, as he was very fond of Kitty, and his heart was softened, he reflected that this brother-in-law of his didn't look like the thief and murderer their local paper had pictured him; and now that he remembered, the other side had held him up as a pattern of purity and righteousness. "I must go back, James," he said, meekly; "but with you permission, I'll take Kitty home with me for a visit, and show her the setting sun."

"All right," said James, "only remember that until she comes back my sun will never rise."

Then Joshua went out and telegraphed to Mrs. Bixby that he had found Kitty, but everything was not exactly as he expected.

"No, I guess not," said Mrs. Bixby; "oh, no, she isn't quite the dear, innocent angel he imagined; some impudent baggage, I suppose, that he's picked up in the streets. I've no doubt she'll cheat and mislead the poor old idiot to his heart's content; but he mustn't bring any of his Murphys here. I won't have them at my house; that's very certain."

But when, some weeks later, she, together with the rest of the family, went down to the train to see Joshua off, she found there a beautiful and fascinating women; who gave such pretty little compliments and greetings to her grown-up relatives, and lovely little silver bits and trinkets to the little ones, that even the adamantine heart of Mrs. Bixby was softened; and when the train went off, taking with it Joshua Flanders and Kitty, and when a gentleman, with a diamond upon his little finger as a plover's egg, offered her his arm on the way from the wharf, Mrs. Bixby took it blandly, saving to herself, "After all there's many a Murphy."

RONDEL.

O foolish heart! thy joy may turn to grief;
The brightest day will darken, being brief,
In happy eyes unhappy tears may start;
The fairest flower, unfolding leaf by leaf,
Must, in full blossom, with its petals part—
O foolish heart!

O careless heart! the clouds will veil the sky;
With swift advance the winter draweth nigh.
And soon in gloom with glowing light depart;
The song may falter with the weary sign—
The throbs of anguish with thy pulses start—
O careless heart!

O happy heart! content with passing joy,
Charmed by the strains the minstrel birds employ,
Where golden sunbeams through the branches dart;
The brimming chalice is without alloy—
Without the bitterness the years impart—
O happy heart!

HOW THEY TALKED ABOUT WASHINGTON.—In 1797, when Washington was closing his second term of the Presidency, as General Grant has done, a newspaper, the Aurora, the New York Sun of that day, attacked the retiring President in the following words:

"Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," &c., was the pious ejaculation of a man who beheld a flood of happiness rushing upon mankind. If ever there was a time that would license the reiteration of the exclamation, that time has arrived, for the man who is the source of all the misfortunes of our country is this day reduced to the level of his fellow-citizens, and is no longer possessed of power to multiply evils upon the United States. If ever there was a period for rejoicing, this is the moment; every heart in unison with the freedom and happiness of the people ought to beat high with exultation that the name of Washington from this day ceases to give currency to political impiety and to legalize corruption. It is a subject of the greatest astonishment that a single individual should have cankered the principles of Republicanism in an enlightened people, and should have carried his designs against the public liberty so far as to have put in jeopardy its very existence. Such, however, are the facts, and with these staring us in the face this day (March 4, 1797) ought to be a Jubilee in the United States!"

The Rev. Stopford Brooke, Chaplain in Ordinary to Queen Victoria and one of the most brilliant and powerful preachers in London, first became known while he was holding the humble position of English chaplain at Berlin. The Princess Royal heard him, and wrote home such glowing accounts of his eloquence that his fortune was soon assured. Mr. Brooke cannot be described as belonging to any distinct theological school or sect. An inquisitive old lady once asked him at a dinner party what his theological opinions were. "Theology," he replied, "oh, I gave that up years ago!" His idea has always been to rub out the sharp lines of distinction between sacred and profane, and to bring the pulpit to bear on subjects other than those commonly called religious; and, in short, to bring political, historical, scientific, and artistic work, in their connection with theology, under the province of the Christian ministry.

LOVE.—The love that survives the tomb (says Irving) is the noblest attribute of the soul. If it has woes, it has likewise its delights: and when the overwhelming burst of grief is lulled into the gentle tear of recollection, then the sudden anguish and convulsive agony over the present ruins of all we most loved are softened away into pensive meditations of all that was in the days of its loveliness. Who would root such a sorrow from the heart? Though it may sometimes throw a passing cloud over the bright hour of gaiety, or spread a deeper sadness over the hours of gloom, yet who would exchange it for the song of pleasure or the burst of revelry? No; there is a voice from the tomb sweeter than song; there is a remembrance of the dead to which we turn even from the charm of the living.

It is a pleasant thing to see roses and lilies growing upon a young lady's cheek, but a bad sign to see a man's face break out in blossoms.

THE FAVOR.

BY PERCY VERE.

I saw her step with airy grace,
And take a favor from its place;
As lightly tripped she through the hall
As leaves from off their branches fall.

She stop'd before me—in her eyes
I caught a glimpse of paradise;
"This favor I bestow," said she,
"In wise of days of chivalry."

"Is it your heart that favors me?"
I asked, with youth's timidity;
And when she sweetly answered "Yes,"
Crowned was my earthly happiness.

HOTEL CARS.

For some time we have heard hints of a line of hotel cars for the Omaha and California line of the Chicago and North-Western Railway. When asked about their cars, the officers have uniformly evaded a direct reply. Our "reportorial instincts" taught us to investigate for ourselves. We have done so, and are now enable to state positively that such a line will be started in the early spring, and that the cars are now being built. The fact will no longer be a secret after this day's paper gets before the public.

Four of the most magnificent hotel cars that have been built anywhere are now being constructed by the Pullman Palace Car Company expressly for this line. These cars will be sixty-six feet long, ten feet wide, and ten feet high, with twelve sections, one drawing room (with table room for six persons), and one state room besides the kitchen, china closet, dressing room, etc. The interior will be finished with black and white walnut, mahogany, French ash, and curled maple, the place of the usual head-lining being filled in with foreign polished woods; the panels between the windows will be of California laurel and other California woods; the lamp fixtures, window fastenings, door hardware, etc., will be of triple plated silver. —Three members who have heretofore occupied seats in the Packard House—Israel J. Daly of St. Landry, Bernard Davies of Pointe Coupee, and Ulger Roudrogue of Iberia—were yesterday sworn in and took their seats in the Nicholls Legislature.

—Nothing has been discovered regarding the whereabouts of A. Oakey Hall, of New York. The general impression, however, seems to be that he has gone to Europe to avoid the revelations which may be made in the Sweeny trial, which will take place soon.

—The journalistic editors find indications of hard times in the increase of manuscripts of forced their publication. The number of forced last year was double what it was two years ago in those sets of Harpers' three publications coming in at the rate of 5,000 or 6,000 yearly, while in 1870 Scribner's Monthly received 2,500.

—The trustee of the bankrupt estate of Jay Cooke & Co. hopes to be able to issue another distribution of cash and stocks during the current year. The dividend and distribution already made equal about 19 per cent. of the original claims, or a round rate of interest on the latter.

—Gov. Chamberlain had conferences with the President Mr. Evarts and others yesterday. Senator Patterson says that Chamberlain is disposed not to compromise. Wade Hampton made speeches at Wilmington and other places en route to Washington yesterday, and will be at the Capital to-day. He will stay only 24 hours.

—At noon on the 21st a stranger entered the Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, carrying a large box. The officers of the bank were in the rear part of the room in plain sight. The man placed the box on the floor, jumped upon it, and reaching over the counter railing, grabbed a number of packages of bills and escaped. The bank officers say the loss is fully $25,000.

—The President has appointed Under Secretary of Congress Peter A. S. Packard, of Salem, Miss. Prof. C. V. Riley, State entomologist of Missouri and Curtis Thomas, State entomologist of Illinois, to investigate the ravages of the grasshoppers in the Western States. These gentlemen will at once start for the grasshopper country, in order to be there before the time of hatching of eggs, and watch the development of the insects.

—One of the best magazines for young people now published is "Wide Awake," issued in Boston by D. Lothrop & Co., at $2 per annum. It is conducted by Miss Elbridge, a very successful writer for children, and its contents are of a highly satisfactory character. The pictures are well drawn and, in every part, the magazine bears marks of careful preparation.

—Senator Chaffee, in a conversation the other day, was asked how he liked the new Cabinet, and immediately told the following story: "Once upon a time a party of gentlemen in Maine started out on a hunting expedition. On the way they elected one of their number to the responsible position of cook with the understanding that the first one who growled or objected to the cooking should take the cook's place, and that this rule should continue throughout the trip. On the first morning, while at breakfast, one of the party took up a biscuit put it to his mouth, but out a piece, and immediately exclaimed: 'Whew, how salty! but I like it.'

—After two days of delay, occasioned by the non-acceptance by Vice President Wheeler and others, the President has chosen the Louisiana Commission with the wisdom that he has selected all his counselors. Judge Lawrence, ex-Governor Brown, Gen. Hawley, Gen. John M. Harlan, and Wayne MacVeagh—these are far-minded, just men, whose sympathies must be strongly with the progressive policy of the President. They go to Louisiana without instructions, but it is believed their plan contemplates a consolidation of the two Legislatures, a recanvass of the vote for Governor by this Legislature, and a recognition by the Administration of the Governor found to have been elected. If this plan fails, then it is believed that the troops will be withdrawn and the people of Louisiana allowed to settle their difficulties as best they can.

—After many changes and apparent settlement of the Turkish difficulties by diplomacy, the news within a few days shows that war between Russia and Turkey is imminent. Diplomacy is supposed to be exhausted, and that nothing can be gained in the interest of peace by further delay. Austria has delayed putting her troops on a war footing owing to her crippled finances, but she is now preparing to send 240,000 men to the frontier. Russia has already a Southern army of 300,000 men organized, supported by a reserve of 1,000,000. On their part, the Turks are likewise belligerent, the new Parliament having proved as pliant as any personal ruler could desire. A peril will not likely pass away before war of great magnitude will be carried by Russia into the Turkish Empire, and in all probability separating the provinces from the main government and reducing the Turks to a dependence upon Russia and Austria.

—A Washington despatch to the N. Y. Tribune says — That portion of Wendell Phillips's harangue at Philadelphia, a few days since, in which he attacked Attorney General Devens, calling him a slave hound, has attracted considerable attention here. Gen. Devens's friends say that Wendell Phillips has told only half the facts. Gen. Devens was United State Marshal in Boston at the time mentioned, and performed his sworn legal duty as a United States officer under the Fugitive Slave law in the matter of the slave Thomas Sims. Wendell Phillips did not state the fact that Gen. Devens, having done his duty as a United States officer, purchased with his own money that slave of his master and immediately gave him his freedom. Gen. Devens's friends say moreover that in the war for emancipation he was found always at the front in the thickest of the fight when Wendell Phillips was demanding pay for speeches in the rear.

—Ten years ago a handsome young man passed through Monticello, Ky., and was noticed by a young girl sitting at the window of the most aristocratic house of the town. She fell in love with him at first sight. She had wealth, culture, and beauty. He was poor, and was then on his way to seek fortune as a cattle herder in Texas. After many ups and downs he found himself the owner of a silver mine in New Mexico. The girl bloomed into a rarely beautiful woman, with literary ability, and became a contributor to the Apostolic Times. She learned who the unconscious object of her fancy was, and they corresponded throughout ten years. She never wrote a word of her personal attractions or family, nor did he speak of his good fortune. A few weeks ago he wrote her proposing marriage, and soon followed his letter to her Kentucky home, where he saw her for the first time. Recently they were married, and Miss Annie Berry, that was, learned on reaching Silver City that her husband, R. B. Metcalf, was the greatest capitalist in New Mexico.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26, 1877.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—Last week I wrote you that the Democracy were not happy. Now they are. They have, they say, discovered that President Hayes has been guilty of bad faith, and they are exultant indeed at the confirmation of their "I told you so." They claim that the Southern members of Congress waived their opposition to His being declared elected on the sole ground of certain pledges made by Mr. Hayes confidential friends, that when installed he would summarily withdraw the troops from South Carolina and Louisiana. They claim further that he never could have been declared elected but for the assistance of the Southern Democrats, and now that he refuses to abide by his agreement he is charged with fraud and deception in profusest Democratic epithets. It has been said that a Democrat is not happy unless he is throwing mud or vilifying his opponent, and the wholesale denunciations now extended to Mr. Hayes seem to indicate that the Democracy generally is enjoying a high degree of felicity over this newly discovered mare's nest. Senator Sherman and Messrs. Garfield, Foster and Matthews are the friends of Mr. Hayes said to be the parties to the agreement which was reduced to writing and given to Senator Gordon. But as Senators Sherman and Gordon repudiate the alleged share of the burg in and as no one else has the convincing papers, and further as Mr. Hayes has been in entire ignorance of the whole matter until the pugilant Democrats paraded it in their press over the country, we are unable to give the particulars in olden. Of course we cannot say what the immediate or ultimate Democratic papers say in the premises. Hence you may assume the fact that Mr. Hayes did bargain for the place and that he unfaithfully sold the unsophisticated and verdant Democrats. Careful analysis however of the votes in Congress show that had the twenty Southern Democrats who voted for Mr. Hayes in fact, cast the votes absolutely there would still have been a majority for him. But then what boots that. The Democrats allege certain facts at which neither of the associate principals thereto have any knowledge, and further unqualifiedly deny all the allegations hence we wish to know the pronouncers of the Democratic press to tell nothing but the truth henceforth straight and because we would like to believe that some men other than the Democrats can consistently give us a truthful statement. We might here ask why should the Democracy go into spasms of rage over this newly discovered bargain when Mr. Hayes's letter of acceptance, his Inaugural address, his Cabinet, particularly composed as it is of Liberals and Northern and Southern men, and his every word since he became President unmistakably point to the very matters alluded to by it. He is to continue the discreet policy he has thus by the example of future rule by Mr. Johnson to enter it the very outset of his administration up in summary disposition of matters of state which our statesmen have been unable in the past to adjust—and no one but a Democratic or fanatic would force him into haste. Notwithstanding his avowed repugnance to associations to bolster up by State government and his reiterated assertion that we must have full and complete restoration of Government throughout the Union yet because he very properly pursues a cautious statesmanlike course and forces peace upon all would be belligerents until time shall have demonstrated the necessity of definite action the rampant Democracy have charge him with fraud and deception in interested terms. Mr. Johnson at one swoop was going to solve the reconstruction problem but instead gave us Underwood civil and the unsettled political affairs of South Carolina and Louisiana today more than ten years after his attempt, is much darker than all adverse haste as to all other causes combined. It is noteworthy that the very parties who aided him forward are those who are now condemning Mr. Hayes for not precipitately withdrawing the troops and trusting everything in these two States to the tender mercies of bad men at arms. Mr. Lincoln's policy of making haste slowly is undoubtedly second only to that with him and General Grant time has proved such course to be the most productive of beneficial results. Neither the publicans here omit to believing Mr. Hayes should take all resultants, but many South Carolina extremists claim that Packard and Chamberlain should be peremptorily recognized. We who know him believe he will not allow himself to be swayed from his course of sagacious and commendable leniency, for there is not the slightest reason why he should not proceed cautiously and with fullest understanding. He has been President three weeks only, office seekers by the thousand have passed him by, and might because certain places had to be filled by new appointments and it is sheer stupidity to hold him amenable for delay in adjusting Southern matters which had eight years of General Grant's best judgment without successful issue.

THE COMMISSION.

Gov. Brown of Tennessee is the only person who has as yet accepted the invitation to go South as member of the proposed commission, and it seems a proposition not meeting with much favor at any hands. One portion of the Republicans will accept Mr. Hayes act on as final and as right without the deliberations of a commission. The Southern Republicans do not want it, fearing it may advise the recognition of Hampton and Nicholls. The Democrats shy at it not because they claim it would be but a repetition of the Electoral Commission of eight to seven for the majority sent South would be Republican and would, as in the late tribunal, decide from partizan standpoint. Hence the proposition has few friends. We regard it as one calculated merely to gain time which is imperatively necessary under the agitation and we fear it for that reason to be will be here and their friends are busied preparing for their reception. Both will go before the Cabinet determined to make no concessions of any nature, at least such is the stand taken in advance by their friends hence the President will gain nothing by personal interview and will have to act upon his judgment without regard to the statements of the Governors.

—There were over 100 babies in the recent show in Cincinnati, and the enterprise was a great success, the hall being crowded for several days by visitors. It is said to be formed, under the control of policemen, to prevent confusion. The babies, on their mothers' laps, were ranged at the sides of the wall behind railings. There were twenty-two pairs of twins, and two sets of triplets. Prizes were given, awards in each class being given by two women and a physician, and the Mayor presided at the distributions. Health and beauty, separate or combined, were the merits that won, except that the triplets triumphed through force of number. The dresses of the little ones were in many instances elaborate and expensive.

—There was an exciting bear hunt in Greensboro, N. C., the other day, when a party of citizens followed an animal two days, finally they overtook the animal at nightfall and a shot from one of the party finished him. On examination the bear was found to be a large St. Bernard dog. The hunters are now looking for a small hole to crawl into.

—It is rather significant that a number of Western Massachusetts people who went to Kansas a few years since and came back disgusted, have come to the conclusion that, after all the pests of grasshoppers and the drouth, times in Massachusetts are worse than in Kansas and are preparing to return, this time to stay.

EXECUTION OF THE MORMAN LEE.

The execution of the Morman Bishop John D. Lee for his participation in the infamous and horrible Mountain Meadow Massacre took place last Friday, on the spot where the crime was perpetrated nearly twenty years ago. He was taken there under a strong military guard from Beaver City, where the trial was conducted. A stone cross erected over the graves of the murdered and bearing the words "Vengeance is mine. I will repay, saith the Lord," stood in plain sight. While seated on his coffin, awaiting the signal for his execution, Lee said to District Attorney: "I feel resigned to my fate. I have done nothing designedly wrong in this affair. I used my utmost endeavors to save those people. I would have given worlds, were they at my command, to have avoided that calamity, but I could not. I am sacrificed to satisfy feelings, and am used to gratify parties, but I am ready to die. I do not believe anything that is now practiced and taught by Brigham Young. I do not agree with him. I believe he is leading his people astray. But I believe in the gospel as taught in its purity by Joseph Smith in former days. I have my reasons for saying this. I used to make this matter all my pleasure (evidently alluding to Brigham Young), and did so for thirty years. See how and what I have come to this day. I have been sacrificed in a cowardly manner. I ask the Lord my God to extend His mercy to me and receive my spirit. My children are here present." After prayers by the Rev. Mr. Stokes a Methodist clergyman, United States Marshal Wilson tied a white handkerchief over his eyes and Lee. Five men selected as the executioners then raised their rifles to their shoulders, and took aim at the bloodfolded man sitting on his coffin about twenty feet in front of them, and at the word, "Fire!" pulled the triggers. Lee fell back with five bullet holes in his breast and died instantly.

An extended confession by Lee which fully implicates Brigham Young and other Mormons has been published. He says the massacre was the direct result of the teachings of Brigham Young and was committed by the orders of those high in authority. The immediate orders were issued by Col. Dame, Lieut. Col. Haight and the Council of the City, Utah. The Indians were caused by Lee at the orders of Col. Dame and were accessories and not the principals in the murders. Lee gives a long and harrowing account of the method pursued. The Indians were to kill the women and children, the male body of whites the men, and Lee with a select body of men were to murder the sick and wounded. After a full consultation on the part of the Mormons it was decided to entice the emigrants out of their entrenchments by sending a flag of truce. This was done, and the programme fully carried out. Not one person old enough to speak was left to tell the tale. Lee says he reported the whole affair to Brigham Young personally, telling him exactly particulars. Young said he had done right and sustained him. A plan was adopted by which Young rejected the massacre as the work of Indians.

—The Washington correspondence of the Philadelphia North American of the 21st inst. says: "There has been a fine tempest in a teapot here over the postmastership for the ancient and well known town of Bristol, contiguous to Philadelphia. It appears that the Republicans of Bristol entered into an agreement to have an election and decide by ballot who should have the Post office plum. The Postmaster Jesse B. Mears, declined to go into the election scheme. He says to-day that his reason for refusing was because he thought that the Civil Service rules secured him in his place. D. Biddle and Wm. B. Baker and Mr. Jones entered into the contest. Mr. Baker was elected by ninety two majority, and besides Congressman-elect Evans was his friend. With this endorsement Baker laid himself to the Post office Department, and succeeded in securing the prize. His name was sent into the Senate and he was confirmed. He came on Wednesday filed his bond which was approved and Thursday his commission was made out, signed and delivered, and before the week is out he will preside over the mail bags at Bristol. Mr. Mears put in an appearance on Thursday morning, and succeeds Dr. Catching, General Key at the White House just as he was going into Cabinet. He told his story of chagrin and surprise at being left out in the cold and of his having been butchered by a Baker.

Gen. Key sympathized with him, laughed good naturedly at the situation, and said: 'We never like to have an application on file and thrown by for many years, we thought you desired a change.' Mr. Mears replied 'that he thought the civil service rules protected him, but had no fear of being turned out, and besides there was a letter on file at the office from him asking to be retained.' General Key then referred him to Gen. Tyner. Mr. Mears went to the Post office Department and found that all was lost—that Baker was the coming man. With a lingering hope he returned to the White House and waited with the crowd in the hop of laying his case before the President. He contends that the postmaster at Hartford was slipped out in the same way, but when the President learned the facts he was reinstated. On this precedent he proposed to have his case. This morning Mr. Mears had a final interview with the President. He Executive informed him that he could do nothing further in the case. He said that the Cabinet had about settled the question that an officer who had occupied the post office for four years would in all probability be retained, unless there were objections because, while those who had held their positions for eight years, and the places were somewhat lucrative, and the business of the office was not complicated, so that a new man could perform the duties, he thought that it would be well enough to have a change. Mr. Mears having been in office for eight years, he of course came under this rule, and returned to his home in Bristol this afternoon.

—LAST BANK ROBBERY IN BROOKLYN.—Gilbert L. Whiting, for the past twelve years head bookkeeper of the Brooklyn Bank, was arrested on Friday for having robbed the bank of about $160,000. He had in his possession $125,000 of the stolen property and the greater part of the remainder was afterwards covered. Mr. Whiting's salary was recently reduced from $2,200 to $1,800 a year, and on several occasions he has expressed his determination to make up for himself what he conceived he had unjustly been deprived of. Last Wednesday evening, remaining to finish work at a late hour, and having obtained from a memorandum book of the paying teller the safe combination, he was enabled to open the safe from which he took everything it contained—$100,200 61 in negotiable bills, and $57,807 45 in money. The stolen property he put in a small valise, closed the doors after midnight, walked past the unsuspecting night watchman and went directly to New York. He left in the vault a letter to the President offering to make compromise offering to deliver up the stolen property on condition of being allowed to return a part and be granted immunity from punishment. He proposed a correspondence in the columns of the Herald. In the meantime the detectives watched his residence, and on Friday he was seen to enter it and was arrested and the money secured. He had been in the Brooklyn Bank for fourteen years, and has enjoyed thorough confidence of the officers. Socially he was well known. He has been prominent as a member of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church. He has a wife and three children and a mother, who appears the most deeply affected of all.

—The dam of the Saratoga reservoir, at Stafford Conn., gave way on Tuesday doing great damage. About thirty buildings including a bank and a church, were washed away. The loss is estimated at about $750,000.

BURNING A MAN TO DEATH.

In the great lager beer brewery of Kohler & Kamena, that rises eight stories high from the brink of the Hudson in Guttenberg, Mr. Joseph Stahl, a young German driver of the firm, was covered with kerosene oil and burned to death by an unknown person early Saturday morning. The circumstances that preceded, and the motives that inspired the deed are enveloped in mystery. It is known that Stahl retired to bed at about midnight on Friday, that he aroused the inmates of the brewery at a little past 1 o'clock by his cries of "Fire!" and "Help!" that he was found enveloped in the flames of his burning garments, and that he died a few hours later, after suffering intense torture. Stahl's body, seared and blackened and stripped of its clothing, lay upon a slab in Dr. Chance's Hoboken morgue yesterday afternoon, and was visited by many curious sightseers. In the course of the day, County Physician Converse made an autopsy, which showed that death had been caused by burning, and that all the organs were in a perfectly healthy condition. The flesh of the legs was burned to a crisp, as was also that of the back and breast. The examination showed also that the body had been covered with kerosene oil before the fire was lighted. No one has called to take charge of the remains.

According to the story of John Scharnagel, who was the first to discover the burning man, he (Scharnagel) was awakened from a deep sleep by shouts and groans from beneath. The two floors are connected by open passage ways, and when Scharnagel reached the head of the stairs, he distinctly heard the voice of Stahl crying, "Fire, fire, help, for God's sake!" He ran down to the mash room, which is on the same floor with the boiler room, and found Stahl groaning and writhing upon the floor. He summoned Valentine, one of the stablemen. Stahl was upon the floor, and about his body were wrapped several folds of burning horse blankets. They tore off the blankets and stripped him of his undergarments. Stahl was almost unconscious and in such hand he held bunches of the burning fabric that he had torn from the blankets. I thought that the man had probably been burned while trying to put out a fire in the brewery, and I was astonished to find that there was no fire in the building. Stahl's candlestick, which was a common brewer's light (a loop of hoop iron holding the candle in relief in one end), hung by the upper end from the side of the bench. The candle had evidently not been lighted, and the wick was uncharred and the grease unburned. On the bottom of the bench at the place above which the shoulders of Stahl had lain, was a circle that was saturated with kerosene. The blue flannel shirt which had been stripped off his shoulders by the men, lay smouldering upon the floor. It was the habit of the men to spread them upon the bench when they lay down to sleep, and they were undoubtedly around the shoulders of Stahl at the time that he discovered he was on fire.

Dr. Rue applied cotton to the burns and administered a sponsile. The physician asked him why the trouble occurred and Stahl told him several times the same story that he had previously given us. He said in German: 'I was lying on the bench in the boiler room asleep, when I was awoke by feeling kerosene oil poured over me and down my back, and finding it burning, I jumped up. I saw a man running away toward the rear door. I tried to catch him, but could not. Meantime the flames got such headway that I could not stop them. I ran to the mash room and called for help. I am sure that the man who poured oil on me and set it on fire ran out the back door. I could not see his face. I have no idea who it was. I only know that he was pretty tall. I am twenty six years old and was born in Switzerland, Germany.'

Afterward he grew worse. His fever changed to a deadly chill, and he shouted for more blankets as he was freezing. He died at about noon. Mr. Kamena came from New York and we took him at the request of a New York customer. He was up west all fellow—tall and brawny, being fully six feet high. We never liked him for he was silent, surly and morose, and quarrelsome with the men. He was frequently melancholy and fractious, and for days he would go without eating. He carried a long, ugly looking knife, which he recently had sharpened. A few days ago he was approached by one of the hands and Stahl turned on him savagely and excitedly cried: 'If any one comes near me again or tells on me or gives me away, I'll kill him.' After that all the men feared and avoided him. On Friday evening, Mr. Kohler went to him down stairs, after learning that he would not go up to his supper, and said: 'Now, go up stairs and eat your supper. I can't stand this any longer, and to-morrow go and get your wages, and you can leave.' Stahl went to his supper and seemed unusually downcast and desperate. About eight days ago we employed a new assistant cook, who came from New York. She was well acquainted with Stahl and said that he had often called upon her at the house of a friend in the city. She was soon on good terms with him and they toasted and joked each other. Then they fell out and Stahl would have nothing to do with her.—New York Sun.

—A law has been enacted by the Legislature of North Carolina imposing a tax of $500 upon all non-resident dealers in the fertilizers so largely used in the exhausting agriculture of that State. There is only one local fertilizer factory in North Carolina, this being at Wilmington, while 50 houses outside of the State, mostly Baltimore concerns, are represented by agents there. The outside dealers intend to contest the law. They declare it to be unconstitutional and they have met and voted the money to carry on a suit. The claim is made that the law will operate to exclude small manufacturers and dealers from North Carolina, but not the large ones, and that this will virtually create a monopoly. Little weight attaches to this particular claim, however, because a $500 tax will not prevent a lively competition on the soil of North Carolina for the sale of fertilizers, and monopolies are impossible where competition is free. The only serious objection to the tax seems to be that it will temporarily increase the price of fertilizers in the State. There being only one native establishment, the State cannot at present be supplied by home dealers, and the tax will simply be added by outside dealers to the cost of the article.

—MELODRAMA AT CHICAGO.—On Thursday 15th inst. a man named William C. Pike, spiritualist and phrenologist, came to the Central Station and said he had just shot S. Jones, editor of the Religio Philosophical Journal. He desired to be placed under arrest. He said he had shot Jones for seducing his wife. Jones was found in the back room on the fourth floor of the building where he lived and published his paper. He was dead, being shot through the back of the neck, at the junction of the spinal column. A coroner's inquest was held and the verdict rendered that Jones came to his death by pistol shot, assumed by Pike, who premeditatedly deliberately and maliciously fired them, and the jury find that it was murder in the first degree, and also that Pike's wife, Genevieve, should be held as accessory before the fact.

—A large meeting of influential citizens of Philadelphia (comprising, it is stated, about 1,500) was held last week to take measures for the suppression of the traffic in vile books and pictures, which having been largely driven out of New York, has sought its headquarters in Philadelphia. Hon. John Welsh presided, and after statements made by Mr. Anthony Comstock, Rev. Dr. Hall, and others, a large committee was appointed to take such action as the case demands.

—It is said to be no uncommon occurrence in China for a man to kill himself at his enemy's door, and to leave him thus saddled with the moral and legal consequences of the death. This proceeding is it is asserted, the most terrible form of revenge a man can take and it is much dreaded by those who are conscious of having done anything to provoke it.

—The large importations of salt, amounting now to about 70,000,000 pounds monthly, are due to the fact that vessels from Europe bring its ballast, rather than come westward empty. The fact that less of it comes to New York than to other ports, seems to indicate that it is to return cargoes are obtained to New York than to other ports.

MR. JOHN WANAMAKER'S
GRAND DEPOT,
13th and Market Streets,
PHILADELPHIA,
AS A
DRY GOODS EMPORIUM.
TO THE LADIES.
In introducing the DRY GOODS business as the principal feature at the GRAND DEPOT for Merchandise, CHESTNUT STREET and NEW CITY HALL it seems proper to say that the growth of the city and the accommodation of the public seem to call for such a central and extensive point for shopping. The ladies have decided: Why is not your next DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT?
THE ANSWER IS NOW GIVEN
The Dry Goods Department is a Fact!
All that large capital, sixteen years experience as jobbers, satisfying the wants of the people, splendid location, remarkable store room, uncommon facilities to buy goods cheaply, loyalty to customers' interests, all that these advantages combined can offered to the people.
Notice is drawn to the fact that every yard of goods has either been originated or purchased under the advantage of gold almost at par.
Messrs. Edwin Hall & J. M. Hafleigh and other experts in Dry Goods men in charge of selecting and arranging the stock.
Under One Roof and on One Floor
MAY BE FOUND CONVENIENTLY ARRANGED
THE FOLLOWING DEPARTMENTS:
A——Black and Colored Silks
B——Mourning Goods
C——Dress Goods
D——Ladies' Furnishing Goods
E——Woolens, Boys' Wear, Ladies' Cloakings
F——Flannels and Domestics
G——Linens and House Furnishing Goods
H——White Goods, Embroideries, etc.
J——Upholstery
K——Boys and Misses Suits
L——Ladies' Suits and Coats, Shawls, etc.
M——Hats and Caps
N——Gents' Furnishing Goods
O——Gents' and Boys' Shoes,
Ladies' and Misses' Shoes
Rubber Goods,
Trunks, etc., etc.
P——Men's Clothing
Q——Custom Department, to make to order
Nothing need be said about prices, except that no effort is spared in regard to the lowest at prices. This system originated by Mr. Wanamaker, is the rule in all Departments, viz:
1st Return of money if buyer returns goods within TEN DAYS and wishes it.
2d The guarantee to each buyer, strictly observed.
3d No second price.
4th Any article (including cut goods) may be exchanged if desired within two weeks of sale.
For the convenience of customers a new entrance is being opened from Chestnut street, about midway between Thirteenth street and the United States Mint.
The kindly support of the Philadelphia public so unanimously generous in the past sixteen years is confidently expected in this new Department, the profits of which are not otherwise. Most respectfully,
JOHN WANAMAKER,

NOTES.

—The night school has closed for the season.

—Morton A. Walmsley has returned from a two weeks sojourn with friends and relatives in New York State —To morrow will be Good Friday and is a legal holiday The Farmers' National Bank will be therefore closed

—A new music and notion store will probably be opened next month in John McOwen's property on Mill street

—At the Cottage Building Association on Monday evening, two loans were sold to Jonathan Lovett, at $8 75 premium per loan.

—The Presbyterian Social last Friday evening, was entertained by a magic lantern exhibition, for the especial pleasure of the children And they enjoyed it to the utmost extent

—William Davis a young man from Bordentown N J has rented the lot corner of Cedar and Market street opposite Chambers store, for the purpose of establishing a marble yard.

—As the result of the recent storms, there is quite a freshet in the river, and several tow boats with tows have been compelled to tie up at our wharves to await the abating of the tide.

—Subscribers changing their residence will please notify us of the place they moved from as well as their present location in order to insure the correct and immediate delivery of the GAZETTE

—The property formerly occupied by Samuel Pike as a hardware store, is being altered and arranged for the occupancy of the Post office It is the intention of Dr Baker to have it ready to move into on Monday if possible

—The members and friends of the M E church will on Friday evening give a reception to their pastor, Rev J S Cook, who has been re-appointed by the conference to this charge No doubt the gathering will be a pleasant and enjoyable one

—J R Irwin, a member of an organization calling itself the "United States Inland Mail Transportation Company of Washington D C, has been awarded the contract for carrying the mails on all the routes leading out of Doylestown

—List of letters remaining in the Bristol Post Office, Wednesday evening March 28th Jennings Brown. Jr , Martin Conard Sarah Harvey, Mary Hoadly, Mrs Molson, Hannah Musnuff, Edward Murray, Rebecca Pepper, Mrs J J Shearer, Abraham H Staiger, Mrs S B Wardman

—Tinmon Comly, agent of the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has just received information from that body that they have decided to accept his resignation as agent tendered to them several months since He feels that with his many other duties he cannot give this important subject the time and attention it deserves It is expected that Captain Strickland Yardley will be his successor It he follows the example of his predecessor, acting resolutely, but "with kindness to all and malice toward none," he may do a great deal of good

—While in Washington last week, ex post master Mears made arrangement with the P O Department whereby the mail on the route between here and Doylestown can, after the first of July, be carried more to the satisfaction of the people on the line of the route The Enterprise will then find its occupation gone, for it won't have tardy mails to growl about —A couple of sportsmen hailing from Bristol, went out snipe shooting yesterday They had a pleasant time, a very pleasant time indeed, their boat upsetting, and all their appurtenances, dog and all, receiving a ducking The scene occurred down in the marsh near Andrew Schoeffer's residence, and thither the disconsolate pair wended their way, and climbing in a window, borrowed some clothing of Mr Schoeffer, which, although not fitting their forms as tightly as the clothing they had on, was far more comfortable.

—The Delaware Steamboat Company have leased a property for a term of years, located on the Jersey shore, about one and a-half miles from the Cohansey Light House, across the cove, and are now erecting on the grounds a new hotel for excursions and summer boarding purposes The building will be 35 feet by 200 feet, two stories, provided with dining room, excursion room, bar room, parlors, reading room, billiard room and forty large sleeping rooms The hotel will be completed in time for this season's excursionists One of the company's steamboats, the Columbia or the John A Warner, will make daily excursions to this new excursion point

—The Auditing Committee of the Council have made a report of the Borough finances which presents quite a favorable showing The treasurer's receipts from all sources were $8,153-01. The balance due him at the commencement of the year was $353 20 Payments since of interest on funded debt $555, outstanding orders of previous term $2 121 80, commission $118 37 work on streets, gas, police and constable's salary, relief to poor, physicians orders and fire companies' appropriations $3 080 97, State tax $22, bond held by Amos Wilson $2,000, leaving a balance due the treasurer of $96 45 The liabilities of the Borough are loans on interest $7 250, interest due April 1st $195 on standing orders $2 040 35 due treasurer 96 45 As compared with the statement of the previous year this shows a reduction of the funded debt of $2,901 30

—Dr Baker received his commission on Tuesday evening, and on Saturday evening, after the close of the business for the day the formal transfer of the post-office will be made by Mr Mears It is fitting here to say that the retiring Postmaster goes out of office with a record of having, by his efficiency and attention to his business, made the office one of the best conducted offices in the country, and by his accommodating manners and his readiness and willingness at all times to do cheerfully what he thought would conduce to the benefit of the mail service and the people, he has gained the esteem of all persons whatever their creed or their politics The new Postmaster is a thorough-going gentleman, and has all the qualities which are needed to make a good and faithful officer, and whatever energy and attention can accomplish will be done to make the Bristol post-office in the future what it now is, a model office

—John Scollen, better known as "Long Jack" was struck by the cars and killed on Saturday evening, about 7½ o clock He attempted to cross the track at the Mill street crossing in front of the approaching Limited Express down The flagmen shouted to him several times, and the engineer sounded his whistle, but he did not the heed warning and in consequence was hurled with terrific force against a post of the canal bridge, and so severely injured that he lived only about half an hour after being taken to Cortland Lynn's tin shop The deceased man was of a quarrelsome disposition, caused a great deal by his intemperate habits, and only a short time ago he served out his term in the penitentiary for assaulting John C. Brown, against whom for some cause he entertained the greatest enmity. He was hard working and industrious when sober, and on the day of his death had shod ten mules for which he should have received about $14.

The Bristol Institute.

We have been having quite a spell of weather for several weeks, and notwithstanding Tuesday evening was the time for the closing session of the Institute, the rain descended and beat upon our town in torrents The members and friends of the association, however donned overshoes, umbrellas and waterproofs and braved the inclement elements, and turned out in numbers strong enough to fill the school house comfortably

After the reading of the minutes Mr Henry G Booz, the treasurer, read his report which showed that the receipts from admission fees and lectures were $141 90 and the disbursements $124 85 a very satisfactory condition of affairs, as it leaves on hand a nice little balance to commence operations next season

The literary exercises were begun with a piano solo which was excellent, as it could not help being, when Mrs E J Wilson was the performer, then followed an essay entitled "Mutual Dependence," by Samuel S Swain, read by Joseph W Swain It showed the dependence of the individual the one upon the other, and demonstrated how much the happiness and welfare of the world depended upon the help and encouragement rendered by one person to another It was a rare and finished production A very interesting paper upon "Animals," was then read by Miss S J Wills It showed a familiarity with authors, from whom she quoted—some of whom are not often heard of now-a-days The dumb animals have a true friend in Miss Willis, and her beautiful and earnest plea on their behalf was appreciated and enjoyed by every one present Mr Schenk followed with the song "Consider the Lilies" which was sung admirably and gave so much pleasure that he was encored and sang one of Jean Ingelow's ballads Joshua Peirce then read an essay upon "Sumptuary Laws," in which he advocated some theories which were radical and in advance of present public sentiment, but if enforced would doubtless be of inestimable benefit to all mankind One of his ideas was that the law should prohibit any one from borrowing money except upon a good real estate security, thus destroying the credit system, preventing men from living beyond their means and putting an end to the extravagance and corruption which is the outcome of the credit system Other points which he introduced were a legislative restriction of enormous fortunes, prohibition of the sale of liquors, encouragement of labor and retrenchment of personal expenses His remarks were very thoughtful and well received

A chorus by Messrs Swain Phillips Ivins and Barrow concluded the first part of the programme, and a recess was allowed for a few minutes

When the call to order was sounded by the tapping of the gavel, the various groups in different parts of the room separated and quietly resumed their seats, after which Mrs R A Peirce read an admirable essay upon the benefit and pleasures to society with its results from a cultivation of the conversational powers An original poem, entitled "Obligations" written by Mrs Dr Campbell, and also read by her, was listened to with great attention, and was highly applauded when she resumed her seat Miss May Magennis of Philadelphia, then favored the Institute with a song which was surpassingly charming, so much so that the members were selfish enough to wish her to sing again, which she kindly consented to do There was no one hard-hearted enough to ask another piece from her although it is presumed no one except herself but would have been pleased if she had sung again Mr Joseph S Thomas, President of the Institute, then came forward with some remarks appropriate to the occasion, and said many pleasant things about the courtesy and good feeling which had invariably characterized the meetings and complimented the Institute upon the successful termination of the first season of the society, and trusted that some good had been accomplished which would show itself in the future Thus he went on and the great world outside would not from his remarks ever have imagined that any of the success pleasantness and good fellowship of the meetings of the Institute were due in any degree to the efforts of the President of the Rev Dr Knox at the close of Mr Thomas remarks had not risen, and in a few well chosen words and in his happy manner taken up the complimentary words of the President and applied them to him, to the manifest pleasure of the audience, and then offered the following

Resolved That the grateful thanks of the Institute are given to Mr Joseph S Thomas for his kindness in presiding at our meetings, and the dignity and courtesy with which he has discharged the duties of the place

The resolution was immediately put before the meeting by the President pro tem Mr John K Wildman, and unanimously adopted

The editor of the "Portfolio" then appeared with that periodical under his arm and for fifteen or twenty minutes, entertained the company by the witty and suggestive articles, editorial and otherwise, which it contained and when he had finished his budget and made his bow, the Institute upon motion adjourned sine die

—Last week a young lady while coming up the river on the Columbia, missed her pocket book A young man standing near by, well dressed and prepossessing in appearance, was asked if he had seen it and the manner in which he replied though he answered in the negative, aroused some suspicion and he was charged with the theft, whereupon he reached his hand behind a sofa and apparently picked the pocket book from the floor A Mr Lippincott, residing at Riverton, missed a package belonging to him, not finding it gave up the search when the boat reached Riverton a close watch was kept upon the passengers and when the boat arrived at Burlington the same young man was discovered with the package had under his over coat with the address torn off He also had several other articles which had not been missed He was taken before an Alderman had a hearing and taken to the Mount Holly jail to meditate upon the uncertainties of life

—Among the other things which should not be forgotten, is the reading at Cabeen's Hall to morrow evening, by Mr Hiram F Reed of Philadelphia This gentleman, it will be remembered, read before the Bristol Institute and kept the audience laughing the whole time nearly, and just to accommodate his friends and help the Washington Cornet Band he kindly consented to give a reading here, although to do so he has to leave his business (for he is not an elocutionist by profession) and come all the way to Bristol Tickets can be had at Foster's jewelry store, L A Huguet's drug store or at John M Cullman's news depot.

—Mary A Livermore, who is to deliver her lecture "What shall we do with Our Girls," in the Baptist church, on next Tuesday evening, is one of the finest lecturers in the country In New York and Philadelphia she always attracts larger audiences than almost any other lecturer It is a great privilege which is offered the people of Bristol of hearing her here in their own town, and no one should fail to attend who does not wish to lose a rare intellectual feast, and miss the witty and eloquent words of this world-wide famous speaker

—A new Agricultural society of Hunterdon, Mercer and Bucks counties has been formed The meetings of the society will be held at Lambertville, N J At a meeting of the present stockholders on Friday evening, the ground were selected and the price of shares fixed at $20 each Among the committee to solicit stock, were Eastburn Reeder, George Cook, T T. Eastburn, and G R Gaddis of this county

—William Stavely, Esq , a well known and much respected citizen of Bucks county, died at his residence in Solebury Township on last Thursday afternoon, in the 77th year of his age

Penn's Manor Items.

These dreary rainy days do not look propitious for "our moving community" which community is smaller than usual this year. And indeed "moss gathering" does not prove easy even for the most quiescent in the times

"Spring delights are now returning," the first furrow has been turned by an enterprising farmer, and the ubiquitous schoolboy busy doing duty at public sales The first flock of wild geese have, according to tradition, brought news that the Winter has gone

Very little building is being done, nothing, in fact, but a few out buildings and roofs, and a number of new fences which were necessitated by the late winds The tobacco houses which were blown down two weeks ago are being taken apart and the debris removed

Jonathan Cliver, who was so badly hurt, has almost recovered

"Stripping tobacco" is the employment of many farmers, as few have finished that work yet

The Morrisville Lyceum is prospering in numbers, at least, but would be more interesting, but for the over punctiliousness about parliamentary rules, with which a part of the time was wasted at the last meeting A proposition was made to invite the Literary Convention to hold its reunion in Morrisville Grove and the Executive Committee instructed to make the necessary arrangements

A question was handed to the Penn's Manor Meeting last Sunday, to be answered at the 1st Day School Convention "Of what benefit is the 1st day school to teachers and pupils?" Words of encouragement were spoken by the Superintendent to the children

The Jubilee holds its own about the minimum

Langhorne Notes.

Friday evening last the Friends school closed with a delightful entertainment by the juveniles under the charge of Miss Gilliam The tableaux, singing, dialogues and essays were particularly good for this so young and time consumed to public speaking

The closing exercises of the "Emerson, on Saturday at Bellevue, was one of the best and defest conducted literary, musical and dramatic entertainments that our Borough has ever witnessed, and left a delightful impress on on the hundreds in attendance Many left without obtaining admittance The programme was opened with an opera chorus, "We hail thee glad Spring time," followed by an incident of the war, a reading of pathetic beauty, by Miss M C Townsend then a vocal duet, "What are the wild winds saying," and a pastoral poem by Mrs H M Albert, and read by Miss Goodnoor, Miss May Lovett gave a vocal solo, "Jamie's on the stormy sea," which was entrancingly beautiful, then the orator of the evening, Harry W Watson stepped forth and with power grace and dignity spoke for ten minutes on "Greatness" a much provoking tableau succeeded in five scenes, styled "The Toothache," a pmodest allength and beauty followed when the drama "Bamboozling," appeared upon the stage It was received with great applause, and for amateur actors, was a decided success Messrs Jones and Kennedy favored the audience with two violin and piano duets and then a tableau, "Faith, Hope and Truth" dawned upon the delighted multitude A fairer picture never greeted mortal eyes, than those three fair maidens in robes of white, twined with evergreen, and holding a book, a cross and an anchor as emblems of their mission The journal was brief, but well filled with a varied selection of original prose and poetry, read by Anna Eastburn "Holy beauty child of nature," a difficult vocal solo was given by Miss Mattie F Knight with great beauty and power, Miss F C Ridge followed in a recitation, "Mona's Waters" and received a bouquet as a slight token of its thorough appreciation The vocal duet, "I would that my love," preceded the drama, "Toodles," in which the acting was superb A vocal trio, "Protect us through the coming night," closed the successful entertainment without a failure or that weary waiting which is the accompaniment of such meetings The music was especially good, and Miss Knight, assisted by Misses Lovett Flowers, Willing and Messrs Kennedy Smith and Jones received the greatest credit

The crowd which thronged our streets on Saturday on by-um intent, convinced our talkers that a new hall was the one thing needed, but since the continued rain of this week, there is found another necessity,—a plank walk to the station, from our town

Hulmeville Notes.

Last Friday evening the Hall of the Y M C A was crowded with attentive listeners. The cause of the large attendance was owing, no doubt to the fact that it was the night for lyceum exercises A Van Horn, Jr Chairman of Entertainment Committee offered an unusually attractive programme

Recitations were given by Mollie Wicklin, Amelia Schaler Sallie Gill Ella Davis, Vice Harrison and Emmeline Brinckloe, of this place, Charlotte Martin and Alexander Dixon of Eddington Miss Laura Duffield, recited "The Mariner's Wife," "Absalom" and "Curfew must not ring To-night" This last piece by special request Miss Maggie A Burke of Bristol, gave "Pat's Excelsior," and "Mrs Maloney on the Chinese Question" Readings by Harry Swift Jr, and Allen Van Horn, Jr Charles I and Mary T Harrison sang a duet, "I would that my Love" Miss Burke sang "Come Back to Erin," and "Tapping at the Garden Gate" Rev Mr Ramsey, of Newtown, made a short speech Very good order prevailed during the exercises, which lasted over an hour.

This Friday evening being Good Friday, devotional exercises will be held, conducted by a Mr Porter, of Germantown

Friday evening April 6th, Rev Mr Ramsey will lecture on "Woman's Sphere," at which time papers will be read by Mr H. Swift and Miss M R Harrison, relative to this subject

Wilmer H Johnson of our borough, started for Wilton Junction, Iowa, on Tuesday last He intends going into business at the above-named place He has the good wishes of all his friends for his success

The factory has at last been rented The name of the party renting is withheld for the present, but we are assured that the mill will be running in two or three weeks at the farthest

OHIO MEN IN THE NATION.

At a dinner party in Washington the other day the Hon Wm M Evarts observed that he had never been able to comprehend how a few Ohio men with but comparative experience in politics outside of participating in county and Congressional conventions and occasional State conventions, were able, in a hand to hand conflict with the ablest and most experienced managing politicians in the United States in the Cincinnati Convention, to have captured that body and nominated Hayes over Blaine, Morton, Conkling and Bristow, with their respective powerful organizations An Ohio man reminded him that if he made stood how thoroughly representative of the best average intelligence of the Nation Ohio people are he might understand the situation, and proceeded to eulogize Ohio man and their character generally, "Oh yes, retorted Evarts dryly "I have heard and seen a great deal of Ohio but I haven't yet seen much of that reserve"

Readers will understand that Ohio will be construed to exhibit some of that "reserve" upon reflecting that she now stands represented in high places as follows

The President of the United States
The General of the Army
The Lieutenant General of the Army
The Vice Admiral (Rowan) of the Navy
The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court
An Associate Justice (Swayne) of the Supreme Court
The Secretary of the Treasury
The Comptroller of the Treasury
The wife of the President and the wife of the Secretary of the Navy are also Ohio women, and both of them the very best representatives of American women —Dayton Journal

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS and if taken before the lungs are destroyed a speedy cure is effected

To these three medicines Dr J H Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver removing all obstructions relax the gall bladder the bile starts freely and the liver is soon relieved

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood then the lungs heal and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent getting fresh cold

All who wish to consult Dr Schenck either personally or by letter can do so at his principal office corner of Sixth and Arch Sts Philadelphia every Monday

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country

STILL TO BE HEADQUARTERS FOR CLOTHING.

WANAMAKER & BROWN.
IN THE OLD PLACE AT THE OLD TRADE.

All the best talent, experience and advantages we can command, continued at OAK HALL, to produce the BEST and CHEAPEST CLOTHING for man and boy.

For sixteen years we have lived at the old corner of SIXTH and MARKET, and the business done there has been so satisfactory to the public and ourselves, that we have decided not to change or move the Clothing business away The people like the place and we like to please the people and we believe that we can do it better than ever at the old place

The sales of the past year far surpassed anything we ever dreamed of and this puts it in our power to start the Spring of 1877 with a STILL LOWER SCALE OF PRICES, and a class of goods so excellent that we are not afraid to follow each sale with our warrantee, or receive back the goods unworn and hand over to the customer the money paid.

The store has been largely refitted, and there never was such a splendid stock of Men's, Boys' and Children's clothing under the roof, nor were we ever able to sell so cheaply Our word for it, and we are your friends of sixteen years.

MAKE YOUR MARK.

In the quarries should you toil,
Make your mark;
Do you delve upon the soil,
Make your mark.
In whatever path you go,
In whatever place you stand—
Moving swift or moving slow—
With a firm and honest hand,
Make your mark.

Life is fleeting as a shade—
Make your mark;
Mark of some kind must be made—
Make your mark;
Make it while the arm is strong,
In the golden hours of youth;
Never, never make it wrong;
Make it with the stamp of truth—
Make your mark.

THE HOUSEKEEPER.

Souse.—Pigs feet and tails cleaned thoroughly; let stand in salt and water twenty-four hours; boil in water slowly, until they are very tender and the bones loosened; put in stone jars while hot and cover with two-thirds cider vinegar and one-third liquor from the pot they were boiled in, in which you have put a blade of mace, one stick of cinnamon, a few cloves, some allspice, and black pepper-corns; cover your jar closely and in twenty-four hours it will be ready to use. It is very good warmed up when you wish to use it.

Head Cheese.—Take the head, ears, and tongue, and any other small pieces of young fresh pork; have the skin taken off and boil in water with a little salt added until the bones are loosened from the meat; chop fine, season with salt, black pepper, cloves, allspice, sage, and sweet marjoram, mix all well together; put in a round deep pan, putting on a cover that will fit the pan and heavy weights on it. Let stand two or three days.

Pepperpot, I.—Take four pounds of tripe and four ox feet; put them into a large pot with sufficient water to cover them, and salt and whole pepper-corns; put over the fire very early in the morning and let boil slowly, keeping the pot tightly covered; when the tripe is tender and the ox feet boiled to pieces, take them out, strain the liquor, let it get cold, and then take off the fat; cut the tripe into small dice, put it in the pot, sprinkle sweet marjoram, summer savory, thyme, chopped onions, sliced potatoes, a little salt and black pepper, and a few cloves over it; make small dumplings by rubbing butter and flour together and add to the other articles in the pot; after they are cooked, pour over them the strained liquor, and if necessary add a little boiling water; let boil until all the ingredients are done; then add one-quarter pound butter rubbed in a small teacupful flour.

Pepperpot, II.—One and one-half pounds of tripe, cut in very small pieces; cover with four quarts of water, salt, pepper, sweet marjoram, thyme, and onion. When this begins to boil add one quart of potatoes, cut small, and when this is nearly done mix one cupful prepared flour with a little cold water, roll in lumps with the hands and throw in the pot separately and boil till the dough is done.

Blue glass is doing its perfect work on the Pacific slope. A correspondent of The San Francisco Chronicle, who had suffered from chronic rheumatism for many years, placed blue glass in the windows of his bath-room and filled the tub with water. He was suddenly called out of town on urgent business and did not return for several days. When he opened the door of the bath-room he was impressed with the efficacy of blue glass. These are his own words: "I found the room filled with nasty, slimy reptiles somewhat resembling shrimps, but very much larger—in fact, a great many of them would weigh a pound. After I had recovered from my fright I called my wife and demanded an explanation. Where did these things come from, and why have they been placed in this room? She looked into the room, screamed, and fainted. I carried her to bed and called for the camphore bottle, and after she had sufficiently recovered her senses, she cried out, 'Oh, these are the nasty things that are in the water; these are the cyclops.' Under the influence of blue glass the microscopic creatures had developed into such enormous proportions that they had crowded themselves out of the bath-tub until they lay on the floor at least two feet deep."

The oriole, which has acquired the reputation of being a mournful bird, is thus spoken of by an observer of a domesticated specimen: "An old bird which should happen to be trapped would probably quit singing on being deprived of liberty, but one caught young and fed from the human hand, will make a most delightful and tractable pet, happiest when surrounded by people, will sing marvellously sweet notes and trills. We know one of this sort that, when liberated from its cage will go to the hand of its owner, assist in threading a needle or ripping a seam, nestle on her shoulder, stand on her hand, bathe in a bowl of water, and when it has had its liberty of the premises to its hearts content, it will go back into its cage and sing its merry tune. It will eat fruit, cake, bread and milk, potatoes and sugar, lean meat, nuts and eggs, and is especially fond of house flies and small angle worms and insects, and will catch anything tossed to it just as a smart dog will a cracker. Talk about that bird being mournful."

Mr. Anthony Trollope said the other evening in the course of an address on Reading: "I remember well when I came to London, a lad of 19, to enter a public office to earn my bread, with very little knowledge before me of anything except that I had to earn my bread, that an old relative of mine, a dear old lady, who lived down in the country, wrote to me a letter in which she said, 'My dear Anthony, when you leave your office always go home, drink tea and read good books.' Now that advice was good so far as it went. Let me tell you that among my friends, among those nearest and dearest to me, among some who are the wisest that I know, I find men and women who cannot read. They can take a book, open it, and read a line here and there, or read a whole page as well as I can, or as you can; but still they cannot read. They cannot take a book, sit down with it by their fireside, and be happy."

Among the curiosities of colonial days which have recently come to light is a deed left for record at the Recorder's office at Reading, Penn. It is dated on the 10th of March, 1720, and is from Marks John Biddle, attorney for John Penn and William Penn, eldest son of Richard Penn, to John Conner. The consideration is $80, and the deed conveys Lot No. 205 in the original plan of the City of Reading, situated on Penn street, containing 30 feet in front and 270 feet in depth. The deed was acknowledged on the 25th of May, 1720, before Gabrial Heister, Jr., an associate judge of Berks County. The witnesses are Biddle Scull and John D. Biddle. The deed is written on a piece of parchment about 18 inches square, and was found among the papers of the late John Kutz. It forms the first link of a chain of title to a valuable property belonging to his estate.

There is something in a name, Shakespeare's wisdom all the same. Twelve years ago an Illinois farmer and his wife moved to Denver, Col., and were so favorably impressed with the new country that they named their daughter Great Prospects. This child has been true to her name, for she is of abnormal size—a great strapping twelve-year-old, known among the neighbors under the diminutive of Specks. The birth of another daughter, not long ago, gave the parents another chance for the display of originality in nomenclature, and they improved it. The names of Illinois and Colorado were reversed, and the young miss is doomed to work out her destiny under the title of Sionilli Odaroloc.

The latest harmony in blue and gold is a peacock room at Prince's Gate, London, decorated by Mr. Whistler, the etcher. The pattern is taken from the eye of the peacock's feather and the breast feathers. These two patterns, either in blue or gold, are repeated throughout the room. They are spread from the lamps over the ceiling, and in the cove of the cornice the eye of the feather is seen running along beneath the small breast feathers. From the cornice to the dado the wall is painted a flat blue, and on the end wall is a large design of two great peacocks fighting, all painted in gold and with flashing eyes of real diamond and ruby. On the shutters are painted pairs of large peacocks.

UNANIMITY OF SENTIMENT.—An Aberdeenshire laird who kept a very good poultry-yard strangely enough could not command a fresh egg for his breakfast. One day, however, he met his steward's wife going towards the market with a nice basket. On passing and speaking a word he discovered that the basket was full of eggs. The next time he talked with his stewart he said to him, "James, I like you very well, and I think you serve me faithfully, but I cannot say I admire your wife." To which the cool reply was, "Oh, 'deed, sir, I'm no surprised at that, for I dinna muckle admire her mysel'!"

An orchestra of 2,000 performers was heard at Crystal Palace, London, during the first week in Lent. The strings were handled by 1,000 canaries; the reeds by the finches, linnets, skylarks, thrushes, blackbirds and brown nightengales; the wood by the robins, red poles and dove-birds; and the brasses by the parrots, starlings and jackdaws. The dresses of the white black bird and the buff bluefinch mule were the handsomest worn on the stage, and the laughing jackass was generally acknowledged to be the best buffo ever heard at a national bird show.

MEDICAL.
The following are a few more of the many unsolicited certificates testifying to the efficacy as a curative agent of Dr. James Williams' Anti-Dyspeptic Elixir:
F. G. Williams, Esq.:
DEAR SIR: I have been so much benefitted by the use of "Dr. Williams' Anti-Dyspeptic Elixir" that I am anxious other sufferers from dyspepsia may learn what a certain and valuable remedy the "Elixir" is. I suffered a long time all the miseries of dyspepsia, and had recourse to all the preparations for its cure without any relief, and I abandoned all hope of ever being better, when at the height of my despair I was induced to use Dr. Williams' Elixir. I did so, and do cheerfully testify to its wonderful efficacy. Though the cure was gradual, it was certainly very efficacious. It is now twenty years since I was cured, and I have not suffered from an attack of dyspepsia since. So convinced am I of the very great merits of the Elixir for the cure of the worst kind of dyspepsia that I have urged a number of my friends, similarly afflicted as myself, to use the "Elixir," which they have done, and by which they have been equally benefitted.
Respectfully yours, &c., J. N. PRICE,
N. W. corner Twelfth and Cherry streets,
PHILADELPHIA, NOV. 21, 1876.

PHILADELPHIA, NOV. 29, 1876.
Dr. James Williams:
DEAR SIR: Deeming it a duty to you and the public, I take great pleasure in giving you the following facts: About ten years ago I was suffering terribly from that fearful disease, dyspepsia. I took several medicines recommended for the cure of dyspepsia, but without effect. I was finally prevailed upon by Mr. Jos N. Price, of this city, to take your "Anti-Dyspeptic Elixir," which I did, and can safely say it was the only medicine of the many I took that at all gave me relief, and have since been perfectly free from dyspepsia or indigestion. I am never without a bottle of the "Elixir" in the house and would not be, as I find it the best alternative medicine I can get, and I freely say to all sufferers. Give it a trial. If this will prove of any use to you, use it. Respectfully yours, &c.,

The Universal Cooking Stove!

The most perfect Gas and Smoke Consuming Stove in the market.
THIS STOVE by an entire reformation of the present mode of combustion, prevents the enormous waste of unconsumed gases and smoke, which it is conceded by the scientific world is made by all Stoves on the old plan.
It produces more heat with much less fuel. It will burn hard Coal, Soft (Bituminous) Coal, or Wood. It feeds itself. It will bake all day without renewing the fire, and has many advantages over all other Cooking Stoves. Patented November 28th, 1871, by C. B. GREGORY. On exhibition and for sale at
THE BRISTOL IRON FOUNDRY.
A Large Variety of Cast and Wrought Iron Fence, from $1.50 to $2.25 Per Foot, put up
